DESCRIPTION
The California Consumer Privacy Act (CCPA) is scheduled to go into effect on January 1, 2020, and enforcement actions will begin on July 1, 2020. The CCPA has broad application and includes a private right of action as well as the possibility of a class action. Attorneys from Ogletree Deakins' Data Privacy Practice Group are presenting a series of webinars to prepare employers doing business in California for this complex law. Join these sessions for insights and practical tips applicable to data privacy programs in California, as well as multistate and global programs. The third webinar, an hour-long presentation addressing in detail subjects raised in the first two sessions, will focus on practical guidance. Topics will include the following:

- The impact of the California Attorney General's draft regulations
- Required notices, including the differences between notices to employees, job applicants, emergency contacts, beneficiaries, and independent contractors
- Best practices to ensure compliance with "reasonable security measures"
- Service provider agreements and the importance of proper drafting
