TOPICS

Let's Talk Politics! Legally Managing Political Expression in an Election Year

Political issues can be polarizing, and discussions about those issues are even more common in an election year. Whether employees are expressing political opinions while on the job or on social media after the workday has ended, or the employer itself is a participant in the discussion, the need to balance the right to individual expression against the necessity of maintaining a safe and productive environment is crucial. Join us for a discussion of policies and practices that can help foster a positive workplace culture and steps that can be taken should challenges occur.

The NLRB's About-Face: The New Wave of Decisions

In the last few months, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has issued key decisions on a variety of important topics, including whether employees can use business emails to organize, the confidentiality of workplace investigations, union election procedures, and limitations on union insignia—to name just a few. Join us for a discussion about how these decisions apply to both union and non-union workforces.
