Mexico's New Labor Reform: What Employers Need to Know

Join us for a discussion and Q&A session on the key issues presented by Mexico's sweeping new labor reform.

Employers with workers in Mexico need to keep pace with a dizzying array of new laws—laws that extend beyond the recent restructuring of the labor courts. In light of these new laws, existing collective bargaining agreements will need to be validated in order to prevent intervention campaigns from new unions. The current white, red, active, and nonactive union classifications will no longer apply. Many employers will need to begin identifying and protecting employees from “psychosocial risks”—in some cases, by October of this year. To learn more, please join the managing partner of our Mexico City office at a complimentary “lunch and learn” presentation. Make sure to bring your questions!
