

OD WORKS!

AHEAD OF THE TREND: PREVENTING, SPOTTING, AND CORRECTING
RETALIATION ISSUES IN THE WORKPLACE

Presented by Ignacio J. Garica

OD Works! is an advanced program for experienced human resources, legal, and business professionals.

The modern workplace presents legal challenges far more complicated than can be fully covered in basic seminars and speeches. Complex laws and regulations, increased litigation threats, overzealous government agencies, and ever-increasing business demands complicate the many decisions that human resources (HR), legal, and business professionals make every day.

To help, Ogletree Deakins has developed OD Works!—an advanced-level employment law workshop series for experienced HR, legal, and business professionals. Each session explores substantive employment law topics using real-world fact patterns and litigated cases as the foundation for advanced discussion and analysis. This series is recommended for HR, legal, and business professionals who have at least five years of experience. HR professionals should have their PHR, SPHR, or GPHR certifications.

Did you know that more than 40 percent of charges filed with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission contain allegations of retaliation? In this session of OD Works!, we'll discuss ways to spot situations that may result in retaliation claims, as well as ways to prevent, correct, and defend against them.
