As immigration policies in the United States evolve, organized labor is becoming increasingly concerned about raids, audits, and enforcement actions. These concerns are translating into bargaining proposals rarely seen before, as employers strive to stay compliant with legal requirements while also maintaining peace at and away from the bargaining table. Workers may also be preparing to engage in more protests and other concerted activities in 2025 to express their opposition to these new policies. Join this webinar to learn effective strategies for navigating these issues.
