DESCRIPTION

This year, the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) and accompanying state agencies have been inundated with concerns and complaints relating to COVID-19. In some cases, the information provided in an employer's response to an OSHA inquiry and the agency's conclusions may be discoverable and used in civil litigation later. In this webinar, the speakers will discuss circumstances under which employers may be impacted in civil litigation by OSHA inspections, investigations, and citations with respect to COVID-19.
