DESCRIPTION

The California Department of Public Health (CDPH) recently issued an order expanding the definition of “close contact,” which affects workplace contact tracing, COVID-19 testing, and exclusions. This singular change has far-reaching implications, especially on retail, manufacturing, food processing, and distribution centers, as well as employers with large indoor workspaces. In this webinar, our panel of California attorneys will discuss the CDPH’s order and guidance, as well as the adjustments employers should consider making to their COVID-19 prevention plans and policies. The panel will also examine the California Division of Occupational Safety and Health’s (Cal/OSHA) proposed draft regulations for 2023, which include further regulatory changes.
