DESCRIPTION

The last several months have seen a significant decrease in onsite inspections by the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), with the exception of healthcare facilities. Healthcare has been the target of the agency's attention, not to mention the subject of media scrutiny. What can healthcare facilities that may be subject to an OSHA inspection expect, and how should they respond? What can other industries learn from healthcare facilities that have been the target of OSHA inspections? Many of the concepts are not unique to healthcare, but can be applied to inspections across all industries. This webinar will cover the basics and more.
