Post-Midterm Beltway Buzz on Immigration: What's Next for Employment-Based Immigration

The 2026 midterm elections have the potential to bring significant changes to immigration policy. Indeed, shifts in Congressional power could lead to greater scrutiny and oversight of the administration's immigration-related regulatory and enforcement agendas. After the results are tallied, join Jim Plunkett, chair of Ogletree's Governmental Affairs Practice Group, and Jacky Maroney, co-chair of the firm's Immigration Practice Group, as they examine how the elections may influence executive actions, regulatory priorities, and the broader legal and political landscape for employers in 2027.
