DESCRIPTION

With about 50 percent of New York's population having received at least one dose of a COVID-19 vaccine, New York continues to move forward with fully reopening businesses. As New York's capacity restrictions ease, employers are navigating how best to return employees to the workplace. In this webinar, the speakers will address several key considerations for New York employers as they prepare to reopen their businesses, implement employee vaccination policies, and comply with the requirements of leave laws. The speakers will also discuss continued guidelines for in-person interactions.
