

Six-Year Statute of Limitations Applies to Claims Under the New Jersey Wage Payment Law, New Jersey District Court Holds

November 7, 2014

By Jocelyn A. Merced and Steven J. Luckner

A New Jersey federal court recently held that a six-year, not a two-year, statute of limitations applies to claims under the New Jersey Wage Payment Law, N.J.S.A. 34:11-4.1, et seq., that section of the New Jersey wage and hour law that regulates administrative responsibilities for New Jersey employers, including time and mode of payment, paydays, payment by direct deposit, lawful deductions, and wage and hour records.

A New Jersey federal court recently held that a six-year, not a two-year, statute of limitations applies to claims under the New Jersey Wage Payment Law, N.J.S.A. 34:11-4.1, et seq., that section of the New Jersey wage and hour law that regulates administrative responsibilities for New Jersey employers, including time and mode of payment, paydays, payment by direct deposit, lawful deductions, and wage and hour records. Meyers v. Heffernan, 2014 WL 3343803 (D.N.J. July 8, 2014). This contrasts with other provisions of the wage and hour law, such as the minimum wage and overtime provisions, which are governed by a two-year statute of limitations.

AUTHORS

Jocelyn A. Merced

Of Counsel, Morristown

Steven J. Luckner

Office Managing Shareholder, Morristown

TOPICS

Employment Law, Wage and Hour