DESCRIPTION

In a recent landmark decision, the Supreme Court of California adopted the ABC test to determine whether a worker performing services for a company is an employee or an independent contractor under California's wage orders. While the new test is intended to provide companies and employers with greater clarity, it may actually cause considerable uncertainty and upheaval. Please join us for a timely update on how the new test may impact California companies and employers across numerous industries, including those in the gig economy, the trucking and logistics industry, and other industries where the use of independent contractors is common and established.
